

College Appoints Five New Members For University's Board Of Directors

Hon. Henry M. Leen, Chairman of the Board of Directors of Boston College, has announced the appointment of five new members to the Board.

The Board of Directors, which was instituted in October, has the responsibility for managing and directing the diverse affairs of Boston College, which contrary to its title is a university of 11 schools with an enrollment of over 10,000 students.

The new members will bring the total membership of the Board to 25. Sixteen are laymen and nine are Jesuits.

Very Rev. W. Seavey Joyce, S.J., president of Boston College, said the appointment of the new directors "illustrates the continuing concern of Boston College in having laymen play a major role in the direction of the affairs of the university. I am sure they will make many contributions to our future progress."

The new members are Dr. Joseph G. Brennan of Barnard College, New York; Dr. Robert F. Byrnes of Indiana University; Dr. Stanley J. Idzarda, president of the College of St. Benedict, Minnesota; John Lowell, vice-chairman of the Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Co.; and Very Rev. Joseph L. Shea, S.J., Rector of Cheverus High School, Portland, Maine.

Dr. Brennan has degrees from Boston College ('33) Harvard, and Columbia University. He has been at Barnard College of Columbia University since 1947,

Fr. Joyce Addresses Annual Laetare Sunday

Alumni Gathering-Reviews Growth And Change

On Sunday, March 16, Boston College Alumni again gathered at the Heights for the Annual Laetare Sunday Mass and Communion. This year, for the first time, the traditional breakfast was changed to a supper in order to accommodate more alumni families. Following the concelebrated Mass in St. Ignatius Church, supper was served in McHugh Forum. Chairman Joseph Cotter '49 introduced Prof. Donald White, of the Silver Anniversary Class of 1944, who was Toastmaster for the evening. Among the guests selected for special honor were the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Charles A. Finn, Class of 1899, a long time pastor of Holy Name Church in West Roxbury. Msgr. Finn, now retired at Regina Cleri, was cited for his 70 years of loyalty and devotion to Boston College. Fr. Martin Harney, S.J. and Fr. Edward Douglas, S.J. were both honored in recognition of their 50th year as members of the Society of Jesus. Other head table guests were various board members and Joseph Fitzpatrick '70 President of the Undergraduate Student Government.

Fr. Joyce, following tradition as the President of the University, speaking before the Alumni Laetare gathering, discussed the growth, the changes, the plans and hopes for the future. Since this talk means so much to all our Alumni, your editors are herewith publishing Fr. Joyce's speech for the information of all Alumni.

Certainly this is a most appropriate gathering for Laetare Sunday. To behold you here brings great joy to us and I know that you rejoice in each other's company and in this sharing of spiritual refreshment, rich memories and deep affections.

I want to talk to you this evening about a subject dear to the hearts of all of us. I want to talk to you about Boston College and about its prospects in this period of transition. I want to share with you my hopes about the greatness to which we can aspire.

May I begin with a personal note. It has been my privilege to serve at Boston College for twenty years. When I came here in January of 1949 this campus and this College were very different from what they are today. During the years of World War II, Boston College had declined almost to the point of non-existence. Its student body numbered but a couple of hundred. Its faculty was dispersed. Its financial situation was stringent.

(This latter characteristic is the only one that has remained fairly constant.) But, with the close of World War II, students began to in-undate the campus in numbers never before witnessed. In 1949 the whole Deacon Street side of our campus looked very much like a shanty town, filled with temporary wooden buildings—"army surplus"—that provided our first real dormitories, a gymnasium and critically needed classroom space. Today the shanty town has vanished — although the last of the temporary buildings did survive until 1966.

It has been replaced by seven major academic buildings, by our present dormitory complex that houses nearly 1,500 students and by the Roberts Center Gymnasium and McHugh Forum, where we have gathered this evening. The physical change is only the outward symbol of much of the academic growth that has taken place during the same period.

I should feel remiss if I did not pay some tribute to the three distinguished Presidents of Boston College responsible for this growth: the Reverend William Kelleher, who, as President in the post war years, brought the remarkable achievement of putting the pieces together again and laying the foundation of the Boston College we know today; the Reverend Joseph Maxwell, who fostered the development of Boston College as a University by inaugurating our doctoral programs in Education, History and Economics and by beginning to establish university administrative policies and structures; and the Reverend Michael Walsh, who, in the period from February of 1958 until June of 1968, presided over what may well be judged the most dramatic period of physical and intellectual growth in the 106 year history of Boston College. Having re-

Arthur Fiedler To Return For Alumni

Weekend Festivities Set For May 30-June 1

The return of Arthur Fiedler with 60 members of the Boston Pops Orchestra highlights plans for Alumni Weekend, Friday, May 30 to Sunday, June 1. The legendary Mr. Fiedler has delighted alumni at the past three reunions and he promises more of the same this year.

Plans for the weekend are well underway, according to S. Joseph Loscocco, '43, Chairman of Alumni Weekend and Alumni Association Secretary. The Golden Anniversary Class of 1919 will be the guests of the President for a luncheon on Friday and then will be hosted by the Alumni Association for the rest of their stay at the Heights.

Other anniversary classes are invited to arrive on Friday afternoon and check in at Cheverus Dormitory. The evening will be devoted to an elaborate buffet supper followed by informal class reunions with each class having its own reception room for socializing and renewing acquaintances.

Alumni Day, Saturday, May 31 will begin with breakfast followed by the annual memorial Mass for deceased Alumni. At noon, the annual business meeting and luncheon will be held in McElroy Commons Main Dining Room. In addition to the announcement of new officers and routine business, the traditional McKenney Medal will be awarded to an Alumnus who by his work and example has reflected honor and glory on Boston College.

The Senior Class will co-sponsor Arthur Fiedler's appearance at 3:00 P.M. in Roberts Center. Always one of the most popular events for both Alumni, Seniors, and their families and friends, the concert will consist of delightful popular and semi-classical selections with a promise of a few surprises.

Saturday evening will conclude Alumni Day activities with an Alumni Champagne Dinner Dance in the main dining room of McElroy Commons. This event has grown in popularity over the past few years and non-anniversary classes are especially invited to attend. Groups and classes will be seated together.

The weekend festivities will conclude with Baccalaureate Mass at McHugh Forum followed by Brunch at McElroy Commons. Seniors and their families will participate in this weekend-concluding event. Alumni are also welcome to attend the annual B.C. vs H.C. baseball game to be played this year on Sunday afternoon at CDR. Shee Field.

Dorm rooms will be available for both evenings. Chairman Loscocco, a member of last year's Silver Anniversary Class, urges all who attend to plan on staying at the campus in order to participate fully in the conviviality and spirit of the activities.

Although final prices for the various activities are still being worked out, the Association expects to offer the complete weekend program including all rooms and meals for less than $70.00 per couple.

The University Academic Senate: Threshold of A New Future

By Dr. James P. McIntyre
Vice Pres. For Student Affairs

A University is a unique enterprise. Despite its formal corporate structure, a university faces different kinds of problems and pursues different kinds of goals than other corporations. For example, unlike a manufacturing company, the university cannot measure either its human problems or its qualitative goals in short-run, quantitative terms of production management. As a result, the strict hierarchy of corporate authority is not necessarily the best way for a university to conduct its academic business. More and more, universities are beginning to seek ways of modifying their decision-making structures to permit broader participation for the entire university in the determination of the institution's policy. Boston College has been a leader in that search.

This year is the first in the life of the University Academic Senate. The body was formed with the purpose of providing for, in the words of its Constitution, "broadly representative participation in the academic governance" of Boston College. Its membership consists of fourteen administrators, some ex officio, some appointed by the President, twenty-eight faculty members, all elected and fourteen students, some elected, and some appointed by the student government. These Senators, to quote the Constitution again, have "with the president general authority over and responsibility for academic matters of the University as a whole." The standing committees of the Senate give some indication of its broad areas of concern: Curriculum and Educational Policy, Admissions and Academic Standards, Academic Development, Professional Standards, Student Affairs, Faculty Welfare, and Finance Information.

The Senate did not, of course, just happen. It emerged from a whole complex of changing needs and dimensions of Christian higher education at Boston College. The most visible change to have occurred over the last two decades on American campuses in general, and at Boston College in particular, has been in terms of size. There are more students, more faculty, more dormitories, more classroom and office buildings, and more administrators. This growth, nudging Boston College into a more prominent place among American universities, has generated new relationships among the people of the university.

Boston College has not at all been immune from the forces reshaping American higher education in the 1960's. People from all segments of the university have felt the obligation to go beyond their day-to-day functions to help the university meet its difficult long-range problems and commitments. The present "campus unrest" - by no means limited to students - began in the late 'fifties and early 'sixties. At its core are people - students, faculty, administrators, alumni - who truly seek to improve their university. Unfortunately, only the spectacular, and many times violent, unrest received public notice. Beneath this sensational surface, however, is a ferment far more constructive - a ferment of people who want the university to keep pace with the future, but at the same time, not to sever any of its valid ties with the past. Change at Boston College has more clearly resulted from this type of evolution rather than by revolution.

We have made an important discovery in our search for a better Boston College. We have discovered that a university is not made up of a series of rigid, impersonal relationships, but rather that it is in fact a community - a Christian community, a community of scholars, all striving for the same ends. Each person contributes more than his specific position would imply. Students are not the only ones who study, and faculty are not the only ones who teach. The realization is that everyone in the university has something to learn, and something to teach, and alas, in many cases, something to administer.

The emergence of this sense of community led people to question whether or not the decision-making apparatus of Boston College might be modified to permit the greater participation of the entire community. The first spokesman for this point of view came from the faculty, seeking, naturally enough, a broader role for themselves; hence the phrase "faculty power," which came into vogue in the late 'fifties. The faculty sees itself as the heart of the university, making the very existence of the university possible. Moreover, the tenured faculty is likely to have as strong a dedication to the institution as anyone. Finally, the faculty have an experience and a scholarly expertise that are invaluable to those who make the university's decisions. They can help in a major way to solve the university's problems.

Somewhat more recent than "faculty power" have been calls for "student power," a phenomenon pretty much of the middle 'sixties. As it exists today, especially at Boston College, the concept of "student power" has more subtle and concerned dimensions than the turbulent, demonstrating, SDS-type activism. Student power means the involvement of students in responsible positions throughout the university. The most common of such positions in the recent past have been on certain committees or advisory boards, whose jurisdictions affect students.

The reasons for student involvement - "student power," if you will - are very similar to the reasons for faculty involvement. Students are a fundamental and indispensable part of the university community, and as such have a great stake in the course the university follows. Like the faculty, students can contribute something unique to the solution of the university's problems. They are a rich source of imagination, integrity, idealism, and relevance, which the university can ill afford to disregard. Students are apparently eager to participate, to join in the common search for solutions, and this eagerness is itself an important positive characteristic which can benefit the university.

It was against this background of development in American higher education that Boston College's University Academic Senate was formed. The Senate represents an attempt to test the concept of a Christian academic community in harsh practical reality. The first few years will provide substantial evidence as to whether such a venture can succeed.

What indeed are the prospects of success for the Senate? It is hard to say. Perhaps the most encouraging thing about the new Senate is that it has demonstrated the wide acceptance of the principle that Boston College really is a Christian community, the members of which share a mutual understanding and respect. This acceptance was dramatized last fall when the Senate voted to increase student membership to 25% of the total.

A second hopeful sign is the co-operation and willingness to work with the Senate demonstrated by the University administration. Judging from the evidence available, the legitimate contributions of the Senate will not be looked on an intrusion into administrative affairs, in spite of the fact that before the Senate existed, most issues were decided in administration councils with no formal avenue of contribution for the university at large.

Further, the Senate this year has approached its task with a great seriousness and earnestness of purpose. Many momentous results may not issue from this first year, but that fact is only a testament to the Senate's understanding that the resolution of major questions comes as the result of exhaustive study. Senate committees are busy at their tasks.

Nevertheless, the Senate does face serious problems. For one

Boston College to Join Israelis

In Summer Archaeological Institute

For the second year, Boston College, the Jesuit University, at Chestnut Hill, Mass., will join forces with the Hebrew University at Jerusalem, Tel Aviv University and the Israel Exploration Society for the "Boston College Institute of Archaeology and the Bible in Jerusalem."

The Boston College-sponsored program is directed by Dr. David Neiman, associate professor of theology at the Jesuit University.

Last year's expedition to Israel resulted in extensive archaeological discovery in the area of the Tell Megadim mound. Tell Megadim is believed to be the name of an ancient Phoenician town, 30 miles south of Haifa on the Mediterranean coast.

The city was first discovered in 1967 by engineers surveying for a coastal highway. In the late summer of 1968 Dr. Neiman with 40 associates from Boston College and other American Universities and the professional archaeologists from the Israel Exploration Society uncovered the city's walls and found many artifacts of the daily life in a shipping city of the fifth century, B.C.

This year's expedition will return to the site of Tel Megadim where the governor's palace and the acropolis have now been located. New digging will start soon after the Boston College group arrives in Israel on June 15. The six-week program will start with a series of lectures on biblical history by the faculty of the Hebrew University at Jerusalem. These lectures will combine with courses on the geography and demography of

for the continuation of the "Upward Bound" program at Boston College. Dr. Rene Marcou, Professor of mathematics, has been named principal investigator of a $280,000 award by the Department of the Air Force for research on rocket and satellite probe data. Boston College Law School Dean Rev. Robert F. Drinan, S.J., was honored by the Milton Lodge of B'Nai B'Rith for his work in the area of mental health and retardation.

The popular midnight Masses on the campus will add a new dimension with the appearance of various Protestant clergymen who will engage in ecumenical dialogue at the Masses. Dr. Thomas Lehman of Grace Episcopal Church in Newton, and Dr. Walter Wagoner, Director of the Boston Theological Institute have spoken to date. On April 27, Dr. Joseph Williamson of the Andover-Newton Theological School will speak and on May 4 Dr. Tjaard Honnes of the Harvard Divinity School will be the guest speaker.

Citizen Seminar Features Forum For Governor's Reform Moves

On February 4, in McGuinn Auditorium, the first of the 1968-69 series of Boston College Seminars was held. Rev. W. Seavey Joyce, S.J., had postponed the opening of the seminars until the second semester because of the November elections and his transition to the post of President of the college.

This marked the 15th year of the B.C. Seminar program which first met in the fall of 1954. In past years these seminars have featured as speakers Mayors Hynes, White, and Collins of Boston, and Governors Peabody and Volpe, among other dignitaries. In all, 70 meetings have been held with over 300 active participants.

The topic of this year's Citizen Seminars is "The Fiscal, Economic and Political Problems of Boston and the Metropolitan Community." The 1968-69 series is to be "a delineation of the major survival challenges to an old city; an appraisal of the city's relationship to a rapidly expanding metropolitan community and to the commonwealth and a discussion of the elements necessary to a stable and prosperous future."

The first meeting of the seminar series was opened by John I. Ahern, Vice President of the New England Electric System, who characterized the seminars as "a representative cross-section of citizens joined together in an open forum to discuss the fiscal, economic, and political problems of their community."

Mr. Ahern then introduced the principle speaker, the Honorable Francis W. Sargent, Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The governor proceeded to concern himself with the reform of the Massachusetts State Government. "The taxpayers have a good reason to revolt," he said, "they're not getting a state government that works very well." But Sargent pointed out that Massachusetts is not alone. "State government generally is in crisis across the country."

This comes "ironically at a very wrong time in history," for "in Washington we have a new administration that is looking toward the states for help more than ever." Sargent particularly attacked the multitude of state agencies which are "not only failing to help — but complicating the problem."

"There are three kinds of people," he continued, "the few who make things happen, the many who watch things happen, and the few who have no idea of what is going on." Boston College Seminars are made up of people who make things happen. The goal of the Sargent Administration is to make the government work. "I am here today to ask for your help in that effort," he said. "We must rebuild the entire state government while it continues to function." To accomplish this Sargent called for a "sweeping reform" which would model the Massachusetts state government similar to the Federal system by creating cabinet posts. "I want to do this with the legislature. . . I want to do this with the leaders of the business community," the governor said in closing, and "I begin today."

Attended by business, labor, and financial leaders, and top state politicians, the Boston College Citizen Seminar provided the caliber of men that the governor needs in his fight for reorganization, and the ideal forum from which to begin.

OF BROCCOLI AND THINGS

There once was a time when "culture" in the resident student dining room meant covering the broccoli with cheese. To use a beleaguered phrase, things have changed. Culture in the dining hall changed most obviously on Saturday evening, March 8, when the University Choral and a specially commissioned chamber orchestra presented an evening of baroque music under the bright chandeliers of McElroy Commons.

The performance, directed by C. Alexander Pelouquin, Composer-in-Residence, was sponsored by the Cultural Committee of the Undergraduate Government with the cooperation of Saga Food Service, caterers to Boston College.

As the audience of more than 1,200 entered the hall it was brilliantly lit by the chandeliers. When Dr. Pelouquin mounted the podium the lights were lowered transforming the hall into an 18th century drawing room.

The program opened with a suite from the Water Music of G.F. Handel. Concluding the first half was the Concerto in D minor for Clarinet and Strings by Bach. The solo portion of the latter work was played brilliantly by the noted harpsichordist from Brown University, Thomas Culley, S.J. The orchestra and Fr. Culley collaborated with expressive precision seldom heard in performances of the popular Bach concerto.

The orchestra, whose members were specially selected by Dr. Pelouquin, was extraordinary. They contributed the controlled excitement which baroque music so demands.

The University Choral gave a flawless performance of the Gloria of Antonio Vivaldi in the second half of the program. The audience was drawn to its feet at the conclusion of the work which featured students in the solo roles.

Looking beyond the music and the chandeliers, the outstanding element of the evening was the cooperation which made it possible. After the rather costly production of Joanne d'Arc au Boucher by the Choral last fall, the Undergraduate Government saw fit to serve as a patron, providing the funds for another program. The Saga Food Service not only arranged for the hall but provided a baroque feast for all the resident students before the performance.

And, of course, an accolade to Alex Pelouquin, father of culture on the campus, "maestro of the multitudes," a ham with a rare grain and an artist made of love and spirit.

DOING THEIR THING

Berj Zamkochian, organist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and lecturer in music at Boston College has been invited to perform a concert tour of Russia in April. This is a special invitation by the Russian government and will not replace his annual Fall tour of Russia and Eastern Europe. . . . Film making has become so popular on the campus that the annual Writers Conference will be preempted this year by the "Campus Filmmakers Festival". The program will be held Wednesday, April 23. . . . The Eagles marching Band returned to New York once again in March to lead that city's famous St. Patrick's Day Parade up Fifth Avenue. The trip also included the first performance outside of the Boston area by the Concert Band. They performed at St. John the Baptist Diocesan High School in West Islip, Long Island. . . . The University Choral is looking to one of the concert Halls in New York City for a major program next year. . . . Black History and Culture Week was observed at Boston College with a full week of events highlighted by an exhibit of paintings by Dana Chandler and by a performance of African music and dancing by Olatunji and his company. . . . The Slavic Circle made Russian and Polish life a little clearer with a three day Slavic Festival which featured films and discussions led by members of the Polish and Russian delegations to the United States. . . . In May, C. Alexander Pelouquin will conduct and give the keynote address at the annual meeting of the United Church of Canada in Calgary, Alberta, Canada May 12-16. It will be the first time a Roman Catholic has conducted at the United Church Conference. . . . (In May a sketch of Allison Macomber, artist in residence and a peck at student filmmaking.)

YENI COMES HOME

The same weekend that the Choral held forth in McElroy the Dramatic Society brought to the only play ever commissioned by Boston College back to the Heights for its second series of performances, Seven Scenes For Yeni by James Forsythe was performed on campus in 1963 as part of the Centennial celebration. On March 6 it opened again under the direction of Rev. Joseph Larkin, S.J.

The Saturday evening performance was enhanced by the presence in the audience of Mr. Forsythe and other notables such as Gardner Reid, Composer-in-Residence at Boston University and composer of the incidental music for the play and Elliot Norton, dean of drama critics.

the Dramatic Society. He met with the students and provide an informal critique and an exchange of ideas.

The character Yen! was portrayed in the original production by Irwin Corey, a comedian known for his characterization of the absent-minded professor. The story is a deep one and the roles are complex. It was a stiff challenge fully met by the student thespians.

Seven Scenes For Yen! follows on the very successful and imaginative December production of The Roar of the Greasepaint, the Smell of the Crowd.

Dracula, a stage play based on the novel by Bram Stoker, will conclude the 103rd season for the Dramatic Society. It will open a three-day run on April 24 at Campion Auditorium. J. Paul Marcoux, Speech department, is the director.

FINJ GJUKU IN YOUR FUNK AND WAGNALS

In one of their rare performances outside of Japan, the Wagner Society Male Choir of Keio University in Tokyo, Japan, thrilled a small but responsive audience in the Resident Student Lounge at Boston College's McElroy Commons on March 18. The exciting program of choral works by Japanese, French and German composers brought international flare to the Humanities Series.

The Keio Gijuku Wagner Society Male Choir is in the United States with 16 other outstanding choruses from many continents to take part in the second international University Choral Festival at Lincoln Center in New York City. The 16 choruses also performed at the National Cathedral in Washington, D.C. in a performance benefiting the Kennedy Fine Arts Center.

This is the third musical program in this year's Humanities Series. The Elizabethan Consort of Viols appeared on the campus in November and the New York Pro Music brought their famous production of the Play of Daniel to Boston for the first time in December.

The Yale Russian Chorus will make its annual appearance under the auspices of the Humanities Series on Friday, April 18. The concluding program in the Series will be a reading and commentary by Thomas Kinsella on April 29.

Mr. Godvin, who was also named a voting stockholder, will operate from the new offices at 61 Broadway, N.Y. ## TELETHON CAMPAIGN CONTINUES

Like just about everything else you can think of, the Annual Fund telethon campaign was a casualty of the snowstorms which battered Greater Boston a few weeks past.

Bad weather forced cancellation of evening sessions scheduled on February 24-27 and again on March 3.

The five snowed-out sessions have been rescheduled. Alumni volunteers have been notified as to new dates.

Despite the temporary setbacks, the campaign got off and running on Tuesday, March 4, when 30 alumni secured 138 gifts and pledges totaling $6,392 during two hours of calling classmates from the bank of Annual Fund phones plugged in at the Law School.

Nearly 400 volunteers have already enlisted for the job of contacting fellow alumni during a five-week period now extended (because of the postponements) later into April.

An added assist to telethoners this year is a fifteen-minute training film, a videotape recording featuring National Chairman John Griffin, '35; Vice Chairman Richard T. Horan, '53; and University President W. Seavey Joyce, S.J.

The film, which is shown to the volunteers each evening after dinner at the Law School, offers tips on telephone techniques and tested "selling" methods.

"Actually," John Griffin pointed out, "we have to do very little selling as such."

Most alumni are well aware of Alma Mater's need for help. They know what's been happening to the cost of living. And they also have a very clear idea on the Boston College product.

If we can stave off the snowstorms between now and April, I am confident we'll top last year by a wide margin. Our objective is $250,000, and Alma Mater needs every nickel of it."

John Griffin also announced that as of February 28 and prior to the opening of the telephone solicitation Annual Fund pledges from alumni had reached $47,285, more than $40,000 of the total in cash payments.

President's Address

tired from this career he has gone on to assume the Presidency of Fordham University, thereby making additional history, as the First President of a major Jesuit University chosen from outside the Province in which the University operates.

Certainly this has been a period of growth in its widest and deepest sense. But all growth implies change; and change in turn generally implies the loss of some things and the attaining of others. It may well be that in our effort to grow we have lost some of our composure. In January 1949 there was, for example, little doubt that B.C. was a Catholic College. Almost everyone here was Catholic. The faculty was still largely Jesuit, the administration almost entirely so. Every student received 28 credits in systematic scholastic philosophy. All Catholic students took 16 credits in systematic Catholic theology. An annual retreat was required of all Catholics. By these and similar signs we knew, or thought we knew, who we were. But that was before Pope John. That was before Vatican II. That was before the dawning of the age of the new freedom that has inspired some measure every nation and every institution, including the Catholic Church and religious life and even the Jesuits and Boston College.

Boston College is proud of its Catholic and Jesuit heritage. And I pledge my commitment to keep Boston College Jesuit and Catholic. But the very position to which Boston College has attained raises certain questions to which we must give serious and not facile answers. What is the role of Boston College as a Catholic University today? It is my deep and sincere conviction that Boston College stands poised to spring into a position of at least national prominence as an interpreter of Catholicism, not perhaps in terms of religious dogmatism, but in terms of our total heritage and culture. Not too long ago there were some intimations that Catholic Universities might do well to spell Catholicism with a small "C". We want our Catholicism blazoned in capital letters. This is not a retreat to narrowness. It is an invitation, extended in the most cordial and all embracing of ecumenical terms, for all persons of true intellectual concern to join us in seeking answers to the problems of our times and in advancing the wisdom and knowledge that are the common treasures of civilized man.

I do not know that the problems of our time are really worse than those that have faced previous generations. But I thank God that in our day we seem to be developing a sensitivity to these problems that was not in previous times so clearly evident. Perhaps the merciless intensity of communication in our day - the speed of travel, the immediacy of electronic presentation - has sharpened our consciousness. At least we are aware that the problems of poverty, and indeed of starvation, both in segments of our nation and in vast segments of the world cry out for answers. The callousness with which minorities have in the past been segregated and forgotten can no longer be tolerated. Devastating war, which even in a controlled form multiplies human misery and in its unlimited fury could destroy mankind, can no longer be recognized as a normal apparatus for the solving of political differences. The cities we live in can no longer be allowed to deteriorate through blight and pollution. As our world in fact becomes one, - as the world contracts and our communities expand, how prepared are we to handle the intricate details of human living?

In an age of unmatched technical achievement, how successfully have we learned to evaluate and master our techniques?

We hear much today on the subject of relevance. It is what the younger generation demands. And are they wrong in demanding it? But the relevant answers should not be sought in a vacuum. Nor should they be sought without reference to experience and values. Relevance must be more than a pragmatic response to the present. Wisdom and history both extend far into the past and will project far into the future.

As never before, society, both within and without government, looks to the University for guidance. Certainly a Catholic University should have significant thoughts to contribute. It should comment meaningfully and constructively on the great question of our time. This is the role that Boston College must assume - almost by manifest destiny. It is a responsible role, a taxing role, but one from which it would be cowardly to withdraw. It is our aim to foster the growth of such an intellectual and cultural environment on our campus that we may fulfill with merit this challenging role as a Catholic University. We shall welcome to our faculty those of the Catholic faith and, indeed, those of other persuasions who, in the spirit of sincerity and deep human concern, will join us in the high pursuit and the generous imparting of knowledge and wisdom.

I should like to explore with you much longer what I regard as Boston College's great joy as an outstanding Catholic University. I should like to impress you with the high level of academic excellence this must imply. But I feel I should be failing to meet your expectations, if I did not discuss with you briefly some of the specific expectations we have for the immediate future.

Boston College will always be in some basic sense a Boston institution. (Some of you may know of my personal involvement in the Boston scene.) Increasingly, though, the spreading of our reputation has resulted in applications for admission from all parts of the country. To some extent these applications come from sons and daughters of the alumni, who want to come here. We welcome the diversification this brings to our campus community - the variety of vision, the diversity of experience. Over and above this, many of the students from the greater Boston community wish to live on campus. They seek the experience of total College living. To meet the pressing demand for dormitory accommodations we shall break ground this Spring for the construction of a new dormitory complex which we plan to open in the Fall of 1970. This will consist of two towers - our first "high rise" venture. Designed by Edward Tedesco, the towers promise to incorporate many attractive features that will contribute both to their comfort and to their architectural elegance. They will be joined by common dining and recreation facilities at their base. A new and much needed infirmity is also a part of this complex. These dormitories will be built on the same ground level where we are presently gathered and will be located in the rear of Alumni Hall. Interestingly, the tower of Gasson Hall will continue to be the highest elevation on campus. Father Gasson thought big. May we emulate his example!

Current plans are to house girls in one of the dormitory towers. This will be the first on-campus dormitory housing that we have provided for our young ladies. And this brings up another point. There are pressures - strong pressures - permeating, I should say, all parts of the campus, that the College of Business Administration and the College of Arts and Sciences should go co-ed. I can make no formal announcement of this tonight. But I suggest it would be an excellent prospect to bet on for Fall of 1970.

We have many other hopes as we survey the intense needs of Boston College. Believe me, nothing is further from my thoughts than to turn this Congregational social occasion into a fund raising campaign. I'm sure, however, I do not shock you when I say that fund raising is a way of life for all private Colleges and Universities as far ahead as we can see. We are currently committed to a fund raising campaign that is geared to raise $28.5 million dollars in hard money. This is in addition to sums we hope to receive from Government and from Foundation support. This may sound expensive. But the one thing we cannot afford is to do nothing. The worst thing we can do is stagnate.

Among our most urgent needs is a new library. The current building, Babst, is probably the most photogenic building on campus. But it is one of our four original buildings and woefully inadequate to meet, expanding university needs.

The project currently dearest to my heart is the construction of a Center for the Fine and Performing Arts. I am convinced that the Fine Arts, in spite of some recent exciting developments, still do not have the integrated impact that they should upon the lives of our students. I am interested in expanding the area of the Arts in the life of Boston College, in part because this is certainly one of the fields in which the contribution of our Christian culture has been most meaningful.

There are many other things that we hope to do. We cannot do them without you. I am thinking now in much wider terms than financial contribution. I am thinking of your interest, your enthusiasm, your friendship and your prayers. Boston College will always be your College. You are a part of it and it will always be a part of you. Your lives are intertwined. Both lives must go on and life entails change. The life of a college is not for a day or for a year. Too much has gone into it for it to die. It will outlast me and it will outlast you. But as the College grows into its great and glorious future, I hope it will be raised just a little higher because of what you and I have done for it. In physical terms, Gasson Tower may well mark the highest peak. But I'm sure we join in common prayer that in terms of moral, intellectual and cultural greatness, there may never be a limit to our heights.

Special Education

The Graduate School of Special Education and Rehabilitation presented the first two of a series of special education colloquia on February 3 and 24. The series, which is intended for graduate students in the field, is geared toward meeting people in special education outside the participants specialization.

Mr. Joseph Kohn, Director of the New Jersey State Commission of the Blind, spoke on "Services for Blind Children in New Jersey" at the Feb. 3 colloquium. New Jersey is unique in that services for blind children fall under the direction of the Commission of the Blind instead of the State Dept. of Education. Mr. Kohn pointed out that blind children in the state attend public schools where special teachers are sent by his agency—as opposed to the more common practice of a central "Blind School."

Professor Edward Connolly spoke on the Residential Care of Handicapped Children at the Feb. 24 colloquium. Professor Connolly, who is the program director of physically handicapped children at Boston College, is now engaged in work in this area at the Graduate School of Social Work.

The third colloquium was held on March 24 with Prof. Philip A. DiMatteo, Principal of the Gaelic School of the Metropolitan State Hospital in Waltham as guest speaker.

The final seminar will be held on April 28, with the subject of discussion "The Mentally Retarded Blind." Prof. Paul McDade, Project Director at the Fernald School-Greene Blind Unit will discuss orientation and mobility. Due to the success of the colloquium series it is planned to expand these colloquia in the future. Further information may be had by contacting Mr. Philip Crafts at the Graduate School of Social Work, Boston College.

Biology Department

The Biology Department sponsored three Wednesday seminars in February featuring outstanding figures in the field of molecular biology. The first seminar was on Feb. 15 and featured Dr. David Shepho of Boston University who spoke on the topic "Model of Cell Motility: Thrombocytes and Non-Nucleated Platelets." Dr. W. Farnsworth Loomis of Brandeis discussed the "Vitamin D Theory and the Origin of Races" at the Feb. 12 seminar, and the month's program was concluded with the Feb. 26 seminar on "Biosynthesis of the Actinomycins" which featured Tufts' Dr. Jonathan Nishimura.

Dramatic Society

The Boston College Dramatic Society presented the Scottish playwright James Forsyth's "Scenes for Yemi" on March 6,

7, and 8 in Campion Auditorium. The play was written for the 1963 Boston College Centennial, and was recently revised by Forsyth. The Dramatic Society presentation was the first performance of the revised script, and the playwright flew from Scotland to attend the performance.

The play revolves around Yemi, a censored comedian in an Iron Curtain country, who is given a chance to return to the stage if he performed an anti-religious drama. The crisis arises when Yemi is met with violent opposition from his native village for performing the drama.

Yemi was ably portrayed by James Borrelli and was supported by a talented cast of Kathy Hughes, Steve James, Bill Cairn, S.J., and Shelly Begain.

Psychological Association

The Massachusetts Psychological Association held their mid-winter meeting at Boston College on February 15. Dr. Lesley Phillips, Professor of Psychology at BC, is president of the association, which includes 650 psychologists in both the academic and professional fields. In line with one of the major themes of the meeting, the role of graduate students in the affairs of the organization, the graduate students took responsibility for part of the meeting. Discussion was focused on the extent to which the association is responding to social issues. The meeting, the first on the BC campus in the organization's history, will be followed by the annual meeting here on May 3rd and 4th.

The Humanities Series

On February 28 the Humanities Series presented novelist

Novelist John Barth

John Barth reading from his latest book, Lost in the Funhouse. Barth is considered to be among the best American novelists to emerge in the past twenty years. The New York Herald Tribune's Book Week noted that Barth's "profound vision of the world, evident in all his books, makes him one of our most promising writers of the novel of ideas." The New York Times Book Review remarked: "The novel, as we have known it, may be unrecognizable when Barth gets through with it; what whatever it is, it will be alive and kicking. What gives the novel life is, paradoxically, its art, and the impulse at the root of the art of fiction is summed up in the simple word story. This is why Barth's work is so important... Barth is an allegorist—a bawdy allegorist."

Barth, born May 27, 1930, in Cambridge, Maryland, was only 26 when his first novel, The Floating Opera was published. It was runner-up for the 1956 National Book Award. His next two novels, The End of the Road and The So-Weed Factor were widely acclaimed and have earned him his present high-ranking place among living American novelists.

John Barth is currently Professor of English at the State University of New York at Buffalo, is married and has three children.

The Humanities Series also sponsored the Keio University Choral Society from Japan on March 18; a lecture by Anthony Burns, titled "The Novel in Our Culture" on March 19 and Francis Warner who lectured on Samuel Beckett on March 27.

The remaining Humanities Series are as follows:

Friday, April 18:
The Yale Russian Chorus
Campion Auditorium, 8:00 P.M.

Wednesday, April 23:
Creative Film Writer's Festival
McGuinn Auditorium, 8:00 P.M.

Senate

thing, students and faculty have major demands on their time besides Senate work. While this should not make them ineffective as Senators, it could decelerate the legislative process. Moreover, the Senate is empowered to deal only with university-wide academic matters. Its jurisdictional relationships with such groups as the Directors, Policy Committees, and the Undergraduate Government will have to be worked out over time. In turn, the Senate will have to be constantly on guard against discouragement, for discouragement in the young life of the Senate could be a mortal illness.

In a very real sense, the University Academic Senate is but a beginning. Its success would mean a strengthening of our sense of community—something which could only be beneficial. Boston College is in the forefront of those American institutions of higher learning seeking to improve the process by which a university conducts its business. We are on the threshold of an important new future.

Visiting Belgian Surveys

U.S. European Management

On last February 20th at McGuinn Auditorium, the College of Business Administration sponsored an address by Mr. Gilbert van Marcke de Lumen of Brussels, Belgium who spoke on "The Impact of American Business in Europe: A European View". Mr. van Marcke was joined during the discussion period by Alfred E. Sutherland, Professor of International Law who during the past two years has spent considerable time in Europe while engaged in legal research on the European Economic Community.

Mr. van Marcke holds a degree in Electrical Engineering and Certificate in Applied Nuclear Sciences from the University of Louvain. He is a manager of Anciens Etablissement D'Ireres, S.A. of Belgium, and is on a year's leave of absence from his company to participate in the Inter-University Program in Advanced Management sponsored by the Foundation Industrielle Universitaire de Belgium.

Mr. van Marcke opened his talk by remarking on the beautiful Gothic surroundings of the Heights, and was especially impressed by the golden eagle which graces our main entrance.

The essence of Mr. van Marcke's address was to point out the differences in the backgrounds and objectives between European and American firms. He claimed that Europe is pervaded by tradition and provincialism.

This provincialism is enhanced in Europe by a language and a class barrier. Also Europe has not truly integrated market, no common currency, no common tax rate, and lacks political unity.

The United States, in contrast, is not limited by these factors, and thus is a formidable competitor and not, as many European Governments assume, necessarily a partner.

The major difference in corporate management is:

Archaeological Institute

the Holy Land to a clear picture of Palestine.

The lectures will continue as the field trips commence to various areas of the Holy Land. In addition to the Holy Land, this year's institute will include an archaeological expedition to Athens and the other sites of ancient Greek civilization.

Dr. Neiman, a noted biblical historian, Jewish scholar and rabbi, will be joined by four others on the faculty of the Institute. The four lecturers and archaeologists are: Magen Broshi, Israel Museum, Jerusalem; Yohanan Aharoni, director, Institute of Archaeology, Tel Aviv University; Rivka Merhan, archaeologist; and Avraham Negev, associate professor of Classical Archaeology at the Hebrew University, Jerusalem.

porate objectives between U.S. and European firms is quite apparent. In Mr. van Marcke's opinion, European corporations do not seem to emphasize profit as much as their American counterparts. He explained this phenomenon by pointing out that American industry is supported by many stockholders, and the responsibility of American management is to maximize returns on stockholders investment. In Europe, only a few financial groups along with Governments, on the whole, support European industry. Consequently, European industry objectives are to maintain a high level of employment and to do the company history honor.

Since risk in European industry is borne by a few groups, companies tend to adopt more conservative policies than do American companies. For example, in areas of production, European industries concentrate on the exploration of one product on all levels and when they merge, they do so horizontally (in the same industry.) Whereas American industry tends to exploit products on many levels and merges by acquiring vertically (in different industries), hence American conglomerates can easily permeate the European market.

In conclusion, Mr. van Marcke offered as a solution to all these constraints on European industry the proposal of limited, selective federalism for certain products. However, Mr. van Marcke thinks that the only practical solution is eventual European unity. As it is now, Europe is forced to imitate the U.S., not for its own sake, but as a means of defending itself against the American challenge.

BUSINESS SCHOOL DEAN REVIEWS PROBLEM OF COURSE GROWTH

Dr. Albert J. Kelley is the Dean of the College of Business Administration at Boston College and Graduate School.

Appointed in 1967, Dr. Kelley brings with him a fresh outlook on the future of CBA as he would like to usher in an aggressive development program.

Dr. Kelley's credentials are impressive. A 1945 graduate of The United States Naval Academy, he completed graduate work in electronics at M.I.T. and was awarded the Doctor of Science degree in 1956.

Prior to assuming his position at B.C., Dr. Kelley was Deputy Director and General Manager of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Electronics Research Center in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Dr. Kelley still serves in various consulting capacities to this Administration.

In the following article, written from a recent interview with Dr. Kelley, the Dean expresses some aspects of the development program as a general overview.

Foremost on Dr. Kelley's development plan for Boston College's College and Graduate School of Business Administration is the hiring of additional qualified, faculty members along with the gradual conversion of the graduate school into primarily a full time student and faculty organization. The Dean is also considering the eventual establishment of a five year undergraduate-graduate MBA program. Dr. Kelley stressed that these improvements are feasible within the structural framework of CBA.

Dr. Kelley expressed his intention to re-evaluate the admissions policies to CBA. He would like to place more emphasis on different criteria other than College Board scores. Admissions should be on a more personal level taking into consideration the student's motivation and attitude as well as his aptitude. This plan centers on the consideration of the individual as a unique person with a unique identity, and with a potentially unique contribution.

CBA admissions policies compare favorably with Boston College as a whole although Dr. Kelley disdains intra-collegiate comparison, for as he pointed out, a business college is a unique type of organization with unique professional objectives and goals.

A major area under study at CBA is curriculum reform. Dr. Kelley would like to see initiated a common core first year program.

$28,500,000 during the next several years.

After outlining to alumni leaders and representatives of the student undergraduate government University proposals for a center for the fine arts, a new and larger library, a central administrative building, and additional dormitories for men and women students, Father Joyce said that these vitally important physical facilities together with additional endowment funds "will enable Boston College and Catholic education to become a stronger force and to bring a greater influence upon the issues of our age."

"We have it in our hands," he asserted, "to move towards real maturity during the next decade. We have a responsibility to renew ourselves and to move the University forward. And 'we' means alumni and students of Boston College, not just those who formally govern her future.

We, as partners in this educational enterprise, must communicate our love for and our faith in Boston College to other alumni and to non-alumni as well.

Fund-raising can be a labor of love," Father Joyce added. "I am certain that it has already become a way of life for Boston College and for all private colleges and universities. We must continue because Boston College deserves our efforts."

Thomas J. Cudmore, '40, Boston College vice president for development, said that the second-phase objective represented a wholly realistic appraisal of University needs and University potential. "In the light of today's construction costs," he said, "our goal is relatively modest. I am convinced the alumni generally understand that, and I am convinced that with proper leadership they will respond even more generously than in ation Board and president of the Society of French History.

Directors' Appointments

John Lowell is active in Boston banking and civic life. His father, Ralph Lowell, served on the Boston College Board of Regents for many years. John Lowell is a graduate of Harvard and serves as a director or trustee of Perkins Institute for the Blind, Northeastern University, Wheelock College, the World Affairs Council, Boston Hospital for Women, and was former president of the Boston Security Analysts Society. He lives in Nahant, Mass., where he is the town's moderator.

Fr. Erphie Shea of the class of 1940, has been Rector of Cheverus High School since July, after serving as Rector of Boston College High School for six years. Prior to then he had served at Boston College in a number of administrative positions in the area of student affairs. He also serves as the Chairman of the Boston College Board of Trustees.

In an effort to bring our records up to date, we published in the last issue the names of some 200-plus Boston College alumni whose current addresses we do not have. We asked for help in locating these "lost" alumni, and we got very good results. Here we go again.

Listed below are the names of alumni taken from upcoming anniversary classes, who (as far as the Alumni Association is concerned) have "disappeared" from sight. If you know any of them and where they now live, won't you fill in the form below and send it along to us? A telephone call to the Alumni Records office (332-3200, ext. 2159) will be equally helpful.

Many thanks for your aid.

NO GENERATION GAP IN GRIFFIN FUND WORK

No generation gap — John J. Griffin, Sr., left, and John J. Griffin, Jr., right, from the classes of 1935 and 1965, have only one thing in common: the success of the Annual Fund.

John J. Griffin is a member of what he calls the illustrious Class of 1935.

John J. Griffin, Jr., is a member of what he calls the illustrious Class of 1965.

Thus, a 30 year difference in the dates they received their degrees from Boston College.

By any method of figuring — abacus, computer, or modern math — the 30 year spread is supposed to indicate in this cliché ridden society a Generation Gap.

Not so with the Griffins in their interest in Boston College.

John, Sr., has continued his long running involvement in Boston College affairs by serving again as National Chairman of the Annual Fund, sub-title "For Boston."

John, Jr., is the Class Agent for the Annual Fund, one of the thousand alumni volunteers working on the program.

Both Griffins are adept at explaining the Annual Fund raises, operating funds for the university, the difference between black and red ink on the ledger and the difference between continuing vital university programs or diluting them.

John, Jr., is not a carbon copy of his father, but he shows his own concern for Boston College and its future. As an undergraduate he was active in the Senior Fund Campaign, working with all the skills and vigor of a political campaigner, and was President of the Senior Class.

He continued his education at Harvard Law School and is now with the firm of Herrick, Smith, Donald, Farley and Ketchum. He is married to the former Miss Mary Margaret Wolohan, and they are parents of their first child, John III, now five months old.

Since young John and Mary made John and Rita Griffin grandparents, the elder Griffins are puffed up with pride, as first-time grandparents are expected to be.

The Griffins have personal interest in the future of Boston College since Dennis, member of the Class of 1968, and Robert, member of the Class of 1971, now expect to have Cecilia, who has applied for the freshman class as a member of the Boston College Family.

In the years from his 1935 graduation to the present, the senior member of the Annual Fund relationship has been so involved in B.C. affairs, he was once asked if he was a member of the B.C. faculty.

"What would I teach," he asked between puffs on a cigar.

He has been president of the Alumni Association, active in every phase of the Development Program, General Chairman of the Alumni Stadium Fund, patron of Humanities Series and University Chorale events, and side-line coach in hockey and football.

He is Vice President of Metropolitan Petroleum Fuel Co., active in Kiwanis, United Fund of Greater Boston which he has served in top-level capacities, and in affairs of St. Mary's Church in Winchester.

About the Annual Fund, he has this to say:

"It's always a pleasure to be working with Boston College men and women in this or any other program. The people who volunteer show a genuine and continuing interest in their Alma Mater, and when we get together to work there is an extra dimension to their efforts.

Of course, we can always use more help. And that works two ways. Boston College will certainly benefit from it, but the volunteers will have the opportunity to renew acquaintances with their fellow alumni."

He adds that the phone of the Annual Fund Office is 969-3220 Ext. 536.

Gregory H. Murphy, CBA '69

his volunteer committees will be emphasizing total student involvement, that they intend "to get out the vote" for Alma Mater.

"The larger the participation," he said, "the larger the sense of special identity with our college. After all, we'll be known as B.C. alumni for the rest of our lives. As I see it, a healthy senior gift is really an investment which will enhance the value of that degree we hope to get in June."

Greg expects to be entering Naval Officer Candidate School after graduation, and following a tour of duty with the Navy, plans to return to school for a graduate degree in business.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Murphy of Wellesley.

The Estate Planners' Corner

by Francis J. Dever,
Director of Estate Planning
Boston College

The recent Congressional interest in the tax-exempt status of certain foundations and other tax aspects of charitable contributions gives some indication of the increasingly widespread use of trusts as a means of making charitable gifts. More and more persons are becoming aware of the economic benefits and the tax advantages possible when a trust is a part of their own programs of charitable giving.

For many individual estate owners the establishment of a carefully thought-out trust arrangement may be the best possible way to carry out personal and charitable commitments. A charitable trust often makes it possible to illustrate estate planning at its best.

Within certain clearly defined Federal ground rules, a charitable trust may be as flexible and as varied as the financial objectives of the individual donors it serves.

Some trusts, for example, provide that the income from the trust property will go to the charity for a specified period of years or during the lifetime of one or more beneficiaries.

Some estate owners choose to retain during their own lifetimes or those of their wives or other close relatives the income from the trust and to provide that the trust principal will go to charity thereafter.

Some trusts, such as the typical short-term trust, are written so that the income goes to charity for a certain number of years, after which time the rights to principal and income revert to the estate owner or to some member or members of his family.

Probably the simplest trust plan is one in which a person transfers securities to a trust under the terms of which he will receive throughout his lifetime all the income therefrom. Upon his death the principal and subsequent income will go the charity.

Under such an arrangement, the donor would treat as a charitable contribution for tax purposes in the year of transfer the present value of the remainder interest which will ultimately pass to the selected charity.

The actual amount so deducted will depend upon the present age of the donor and the value of the property as of the date of formal transfer. The computation is made from actuarial tables based upon the life expectancy of the donor; the older he is, the larger the deduction allowed, and vice versa.

At age 60, for example, the contribution deduction would be 60.321% of the value of the property transferred. At age 65, the percentage increases to 66.58%, and at age 70, it rises to 72.30%.

This is the route often chosen by the alumnus who would like to make a capital gift to his Alma Mater but feels he cannot afford to give up the income produced by the amount he has in mind. At the same time, he wants to make a gift now rather than to defer his gift through a bequest after his death.

The charitable remainder trust, as it is called, permits him to have it both ways. Almost equally important, he is able, using this technique, to reap the immediate tax benefits of making a capital gift during his lifetime.

To state it in different terms, over and above his avoiding loss of income, he realizes—because of savings in his income tax—more spendable dollars right now.

An added feature of this plan is that if the property is later sold by the charity, neither the donor nor the trust is liable for any capital-gains tax for property which may have appreciated in value.

There are certain legal limitations as to the amount so contributed in a given calendar year. The donor may, therefore, choose to spread his tax deduction for the contribution over several years instead of making one large transfer of the property. All he need do, when setting up the trust, is technically to reserve his right to add property to the trust from time to time.

Each time he does so, the actuarial data for his then attained age would be applied to the added increment in order to determine the allowable tax deduction in the year of the new transfer.

As an illustration:

Mr. Jones, aged 55, created a trust reserving the income therefrom for himself during his lifetime, the remainder to go to his university upon his death. In this case, his tax deduction that year would be 54.074% of the total value of the property within the trust.

If, when he reached age 60, he added $10,000 to the trust, his tax deduction that year would be 60.321% ($10,000 X 60.321%). At age 65, if he added a second contribution of $10,000 to the trust, his deduction that year would be $6,658 ($10,000 X 66.58%).

Some estate owners create a charitable remainder trust providing that the income go to the donor during his lifetime and thereafter to his widow until her death. This is a common practice, and the gift to the charity is postponed accordingly. And, of course, since women normally have a longer life expectancy than men, the tax deduction is commensurately smaller.

For example, if Mr. Smith, when he and his wife are both 60 years of age, puts $10,000 into such a trust for his university, his tax deduction for the gift in the year of transfer would be about $5,038 (about 16% less than if he had not provided that the income go to his wife after his death—see the preceding illustration). When he and his wife attained 65, a similar provision would mean a tax deduction of some $5,174.

A charitable remainder gift is a means often used for reducing (or even eliminating entirely) the Federal estate tax.

For example, Mr. Abel would like to bequeath to his university property worth $100,000. At the same time, he wants also to provide properly for his widow by assuring her the income from the property as long as she lives after him.

He can do so through the charitable remainder gift by bequest. Under its terms, the rights to the income from the bequeathed property will be vested in the widow during her lifetime, and the principal and income will not pass to the charity until after her death.

The tax benefit here is that the estate enjoys a charitable deduction based upon the age of the widow at her husband's death. In the example cited, if Mrs. Abel were 65 years of age when her husband died, his estate would be entitled to a tax deduction of $66,580.

Assuming that Mr. Abel had made additional provisions for his wife, the marital deduction plus the $60,000 exemption available to all estates plus the charitable deduction savings would provide more principal during Mrs. Abel's life. As a result, of course, Mrs. Abel, during her lifetime would receive a much larger income from the property than she would have if it had been bequeathed to her outright and, therefore, liable for Federal estate taxes. Additionally, the university will also receive a larger bequest.

Substantial savings, by a charitable remainder gift, are available to the widow and to the widower, and to the single person who wants to leave property to a college or university but who has family responsibilities which must be met. For example—

Miss Green, a retired school teacher wanted very much to leave her property to her university but also desired to provide for her elderly sister who made her home with her. Assuming that she had a net estate of $200,000 (after deducting the expenses of administering her estate but before deducting the specific exemption of $60,000), if she left her property outright to the sister even with the understanding that the sister would leave it to the university when she died, there would be no charitable deduction in her estate and her executor would have to pay a Federal estate tax of some $31,500.

This would mean that the sister would lose the income from this $31,500. The gift over

"Publish or perish", words often heard in the academic world, which do not indicate any special meaning outside these academic circles. Without getting involved in a lengthy discussion, the quote, when reduced to its simplest terms, merely means that the scholar is expected to share with others, the results of this research and teaching.

Among the scholars at Boston College who have publications to their credit are some of the following professors.

THOMAS H. O'CONNOR, Professor of History and Chairman of the Department. Prof. O'Connor, a graduate of the Class of 1949, has recently authored a new volume, "Lords of the Loom", published by Charles Scribner & Sons. The book deals with the conservative textile manufacturers of Massachusetts and their ties with the cotton interests of the South. The story shows the rise to prominence of the "Lords of the Loom" through the nation's growth proceeding and into the Civil War. Prof. O'Connor is also the author of two other books, "The Heritage of the American People" and "Sources of the American Heritage: Readings". During the centennial observances of the Civil War, the Massachusetts Commission published his two booklets, "The Call to Arms" and "The Last Trumpet". Dr. O'Connor also serves as Vice Chairman of the new University Academic Senate, is a director of the South Shore Association for retarded children and edits its newsletter.

REV. FREDERICK J. ADELMANN, S.J., Associate Professor of Philosophy. Fr. Adelmann has recently edited "The Quest for the Absolute", published by Martinus Nijhoff, the Hague, which is volume 1 of the Boston College Studies in Philosophy. The book deals in an encounter between Marxism and Catholicism. Prof. Herbert Richardson of the Harvard Divinity School says the book is "not simply a discussion between Catholicism and Marxism, but a contribution toward a new relation between them and tomorrow". Fr. Adelmann studied eccectical Theology in Munich, received his doctorate in philosophy from St. Louis University and served ten years as Department Chairman at Boston College. He is currently editing the second volume of the series and has authored a number of papers for presentation at various philosophical meetings.

ROBERT F. O'MALLEY, Associate Professor of Chemistry and former Department Chairman. Professor O'Malley, a graduate of the Class of 1940, is the author of "Problems in Chemistry", published by McGraw-Hill Co. Intended for use as a text book, it features hundreds of problems from research papers appearing in chemical journals. Dr. O'Malley, a veteran of the Army's Chemical Warfare Service, received his doctorate from M.I.T. in 1961, and served as the Chairman of the Membership Committee Northeast area, American Chemical Society, 1965-1966. In conjunction with other members of the department and researchers, he has authored numerous research papers.

REV. ROBERT F. DRINAN, S.J., Professor of Family Law and Dean of the Boston College Law School. Fr. Drinan is the author of a much cited volume, "Religion, the Courts and Public Policy", published by McGraw-Hill. Fr. Drinan, a graduate of the Class of 1942, received his LL.B. and LL. M. from Georgetown University, his S.T.L. from Gregorian University, Rome and did advance study in Florence, Italy. He has contributed articles to many law volumes, law reviews legal and religious journals, and currently serves as Editor-in-Chief of the Family Law Quarterly. One of his most recent articles is taken from the American Ecclesiastical Review entitled, "Should There be a Legal Right to Die", a provocative discussion of euthanasia. Maintaining a very busy schedule, Fr. Drinan also serves as Chairman, Massachusetts Bar Association Committee on the Administration of Justice; The Advisory Committee, National Conference of Juvenile Court Judges and Chairman of Massachusetts Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

RICHARD E. HUGHES, professor of English and Chairman of the department. A faculty member since 1955, Prof. Hughes recently published a volume on John Donne, "The Progress of the Soul". He is also a co-author, with Prof. P. Albert Duhamel, of five college text books. He serves on the committee on Student Affairs and is Chairman of the new Curricular Review Committee.

RITCHIE P. LOWRY, Professor of Sociology and Department Chairman. A native of Meriden, Conn., Prof. Lowry is the author of "Who's Running this Town? Community Leadership and Social Change", published by Harper & Row, and "Sociology: The Science feat. After defeating Princeton 6-3 in the opener, they succumbed to Cornell and Ken Dryden. Though B.C. kept up for two full periods, "Dryden is the difference" held true.

McGill was the next victim, 8-1, at the Forum, Colorado then bowed 7-4 before the Eagles went north for the Montreal Centennial Tournament. This was the first time playing under Canadian rules, but the hefty B.C. squad encountered little trouble adjusting. They dumped McGill again 9-3 in the first round before losing to an undefeated Loyola sextet 7-4.

Back in the states, a 10-2 rout of Dartmouth preceded the B.U. game on home ice. The Terrier's whirlwind offense pasted goal George McPhee with 38 shots enroute to a 10-5 win.

After exams, the Eagles journeyed to Hamilton, N.Y. to take on the Red Raiders of Colgate. Sheehy's overtime goal enabled them to take home a 3-2 win. Cornell was the next McHugh guest, and they managed to preserve their top ranking by tipping the Eagles 4-3. Ken Dryden made some sparkling eleventh hour saves to nail down the win.

After Northeastern fell 10-2, the Eagles encountered BU again in the first round of the Beanpot tournament. The Terriers again prevailed, this time by the much closer score of 4-2. B.C. won the consolation game with Northeastern the next week 6-3, making it the fourth year in a row that B.C. finished third in the Garden Round Robin. Between the two Beanpot games came a 4-3 squeeze over St. Lawrence.

In mid-February, the Maroon and Gold hit the road for three games. Paul Hurley's second goal, coming at 19:57 of the final period, provided the margin for a 3-2 win over New Hampshire. A three goal third period enabled B.C. to down Providence 7-4. Then, RPI engineered an 8-5 come from behind win. This game proved costly, as senior netminder George McPhee sustained a hamstring pull and was lost for the remaining games.

Playing a tight checking game, the Eagles beat Army 5-3, as Jim Barton and John Burnett divided the goal tending chores. Burnett then moved in as the regular for the third game of the year with BU at the Arena. A storm depleted crowd saw the best team effort of the year as B.C. broke a 10 game hex which has spanned four years. Seven different players scored and Burnett made 38 saves in a 7-3 victory. The Eagles then closed the regular season with a 10-1 win over Providence.

Though B.C. had a better win-loss percentage than Harvard, the Eagles were seeded third in the E.C.A.C. Tournament behind Cornell and the Crimson. For the first round sixth-seeded Clark came to McHugh Forum. This young team, skating only one senior, had jelled and looked like a completely different club from the one which B.C. had man-handled 7-2 earlier in the season. Fine goaltending by sophomore Bruce Bullock and tenacious forechecking gave the Golden Knights a 4-2 upset win.

Despite the disappointing finish, the record still stood at a respectable 19 wins and 7 losses, giving Eagle rosters reason to be satisfied with Snooks Kelley's thirty-third squad and to be optimistic about his thirty-fourth.

to the University would also be $31,500 less and would suffer further erosion by being processed through the second estate.

However, a simple trust providing for the income to be paid to the sister for her life with the principal to be paid over to the University upon the sister's death would reduce or eliminate the Federal estate tax and State inheritance taxes and would also reduce the cost of administering two estates.

If Miss Green's sister was 70 years of age at the time of her death, Miss Green's estate would have a charitable deduction of $145,260 ($200,000 X 72.63%) leaving a taxable balance of $54,740. Since this would be more than offset by the $60,000 specific exemption, the result is a clear tax savings of $31,500.

Charitable remainder trusts and charitable remainder gifts by will are well worth the consideration of prudent estate owners. Each has its own built-in benefits and each warrants investigation as a possible financial plan.

This has been, of course, only a very sketchy treatment of a complex subject. A trust of this kind should be undertaken only with the guidance of an attorney. If you have questions on your particular estate plan, direct them to your attorney. He will be pleased to advise you.

BUSINESS SCHOOL DEAN REVIEWS PROBLEM OF COURSE GROWTH

sisting of a broad program in which everyone in the University would participate. An area of concentration would not be chosen until at least this first common year has been completed.

In order to implement this and other programs of curriculum reform, CBA Curriculum Committee has been studying many aspects of the curriculum for the past year and a half. General results are expected this year, however, certain results have already been determined and integrated into the present CBA curriculum.

Questioned about the relative placement of CBA to two other business colleges, Dr. Kelley conceded that B.C. CBA is not in a league with the Wharton School or Harvard Business School, however, B.C. CBA is in a class next to these institutions. There are several hundred business schools in the U.S. and of these approximately 140 are accredited by the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business, and, B.C. CBA is one of them.

Stating that most graduates of any school or college make a career in business, he pointed out that the initial salary level and company placement of graduates from B.C. CBA were generally quite high when compared against the national average. As an example, the B.C. CBA class of 1968 averaged a starting salary of $8,000. CBA graduates were placed in such firms as Humble Oil, Mobil Oil, Penn Central, Price-Waterhouse, I.B.M., General Motors, Texaco, as well as a variety of large banks and insurance companies.

The total number of graduates accepting employment was 107 or 35% of the graduates, while those going on to law school or graduate school was 56 or 18% and those entering the armed service was the remaining 46% or 142.

Dr. Kelley cited the business college as an institution where the tools of business, enabling graduates to assume positions as managing executives (ultimately the president of a firm), are taught. CBA seeks to examine the quantitative and organizational aspects of management. Dr. Kelley claimed that the business major in the near future will need as much math as the science major in order to cope with the computer, as well as a proficiency in foreign languages.

A general overview of what Dr. Kelley would like to see the CBA curriculum focus on are the business implications of technology, business, environment (such as urbanology, government, and public structure), the computer, quantitative and organizational business, and international business.

Some specific programs developed and initiated extraordinary of CBA curriculum are seminars on management for Boston businessmen. In these seminars, the implications on business of new development have been considered including the computer, R&D management, urban affairs, and management information systems.

Many of the above programs involve the Graduate School of Business at B.C., and Dr. Kelley emphasized that the Graduate School and CBA are being integrated as rapidly as feasible.

Anticipating more resident students, Dr. Kelley would like to have more dorm space allocated to CBA students. Also, he would like to work through the B.C. Alumni Association around the country for CBA placement and recruiting.

CBA hopes to build a national reputation, and to do this students from all over the U.S. must be solicited.

To accomplish objectives Dr. Kelley has initiated a significant long range program, the effects of which are already being realized.

Chuck Daly Succeeds Bob Cousy As Head Basketball Coach '69

The selection of Charles J. "Chuck" Daly as successor to retiring coach Bob Cousy became official Monday, March 10, when the former Duke assistant arrived at B.C. to sign his three year contract. A native of Kane, Pa., Daly's coaching experience stretches back over the past 14 years, six of which were spent as assistant to Vic Bubas at Duke. During that period Duke earned two bids to the National Invitational Tournament and two in the NCAA playoffs. His coaching career began at Pausatusway Senior High School where he was head coach of both the basketball and Golf teams for eight years.

Daly attended at Bonaventure University and received his Bachelor of Science.

Daly attended St. Bonaventure University and received his Bachelor of Science minored in English. A Masters Degree was earned at Penn State in Educational Administration by the '62', 200 lb. Daly and he collected 10 credits toward his Doctorate from the same school in the same course of endeavor.

Currently a resident of Durham, N.C., Daly has a wife, Terry and a daughter Cydney Maria.

After spending three days at the Heights orienting himself Chuck traveled to New York City to view the Eagles play in the N.I.T. in addition to beginning his recruiting efforts. Although he was impressed by the current B.C. team he is fully aware that the loss of Terry Driscoll and Billy Evans will have great effects upon the style of ball his first team will be able to utilize next season. He feels that his most immediate need is for a big man to take up where Driscoll leaves off and stated that he would not be adverse to going after a transfer student to fill the role while stipulating the ability to fulfill University Academic requirements would always be of foremost importance.

Daly is fully aware of the difficulty in following a man of Bob Cousy's reputation into the coaching job. He has a practical solution to this dilemma, however. He intends to simply roll up his sleeves and get down to work. If first impressions are of value Chuck Daly is a sure bet to keep Boston College at the top of the national basketball rankings.

Sullivan Succeeds Flynn As Eagle Hockey Captain

By Jim Blake, '69

John Brian Sullivan, Jr., a junior defenseman from Cambridge, Mass., succeeds Mike Flynn as the Boston College hockey captain for the 1969-1970 season. The 6'0", 165-pound former St. Sebastian's student was elected by his teammates just prior to the annual hockey breakup dinner held on Monday, March 10.

Sullivan's hockey career has been divided somewhat between forward and defense. He spent his sophomore and junior years at St. Seb's on the point and was elected captain of the 1965-1966 team.

New Boston College Hockey Captain John Brian Sullivan, Jr. of Cambridge (right) is congratulated by Coach John "Snooks" Kelley and 1968-69 Eagle Captain Mike Flynn, before the team's annual break-up dinner at McElroy Commons, March 10th.

His senior year opened with the Arrows lacking adequate depth up front after graduation depleted a fine crop of scorers. So Father Charlie McCoy, then the hockey coach, went to the versatile Sullivan and asked him if he would be interested in playing center. John said "yes" and went on to have an outstanding year.

He came to Boston College and centered the second line on the freshman team. The only reason he didn't pivot the first wave was a boy by the name of Tim Sheehy. Sully collected 34 points on 16 goals and 18 assists while playing with Charlie Teetzylowski and Kevin Ahearn and helped boost the team to an excellent 18-5 log, one of Bernie Burke's best years ever. He started off his sophomore campaign at his familiar center post but came down with a case of pneumonia just prior to the season's opener with Brown. His return was delayed to the seventeenth game against Providence and he found himself back on the blue-line.

His previous experience at that position, speed, and aggressiveness made his conversion a smooth one. He teamed with Steve Cederehuk and was instrumental in the Eagle's last season push which enabled them to finish second in the E.C.A.C. Championship Tournament and earn a spot in the N.C.A.A. Tournament in Duluth, Minnesota.

This year started off like 1967-68 for Sullivan. He was working out up front with Charlie Teetzylowski and sophomore Fred Willis when various injuries forced him out of the first two games against Yale and Princeton. But he came right back and played the next five at center before being converted again to defense for the remainder of the season.

Paired with Barry MacCarthy

most of the time, John scored one goal and collected 12 assists for 13 points. But it wasn't his offensive abilities or his rushes which made him as valuable as he was. It was his aggressiveness and hard-hitting style which separated him from the rest. And this was despite his slender 165-pound build. Sully also was adept at clearing the zone.

Coach John "Snooks" Kelley was delighted with the selection. "I can't think of anyone who can do a better job as captain than Sully can. He leads by his example and hustle. He always gives you 150%. Coming down the stretch this year he was invaluable."

A finance major in the College of Business Administration, Sullivan looks forward to another good season next year despite the losses of Paul Hurley, Steve Cederehuk, Barry MacCarthy, and Ray Bastarache; most of the blue-line corps, along with goaltender George McPhee and forwards Willy Putnam and Mike Flynn.

"Yes, there's no doubt that defense will be the key next year. But we have Peter Morse coming back along with some good freshmen prospects so I think we should be alright."

John adds that "we should be great up front with just about everyone coming back."

Sullivan is the oldest of nine children of John and Mildred Sullivan. His father, incidentally, was a goalie for B.U. during the late forties.

HOCKEY

1968-69 in Review

Even though the Boston College hockey team was eliminated early in the playoff competition, Coach Kelley's men once again finished the season with a highly successful record.

Pre-season prognostications reflected the closeness of the competition. Cornell, top dog for the past two years, was picked to dominate the E.C.A.C. again. After the Big Red, no fewer than eight closely matched teams succeeded in upsetting one another week after week. The Eagles, managing more ups than downs, had the second best record in the East.

At the Heights during the November warm-ups it was felt that this was not to be a rebuilding year. The defense featured four seniors with plenty of experience in front of George McPhee. Most notable of these was Paul Hurley, who was returning from a year with the United States Olympic Team, which he led in scoring.

Up front, Captain and left wing Mike Flynn led a high scoring group which ended up scoring 144 goals. Tim Sheehy, after a stellar sophomore year, was returning to pivot the "Sizzle" line between fellow juniors Paul Schilling and John Snyder. Kevin Ahearn, Fred Willis and Charlie Teetzylowski made up the second wave, while Flynn, Willis Putnam, and Tim Smythe were the third unit. Sophomore Don Callow was pegged as the swing man in a potent offense.

The team rolled up six straight wins at the season's outset. Tim Sheehy's hat trick paced a 5-2 home opener over Yale. Close road victories over Brown and Princeton preceded the first big game of the year—with Clarkson at McHugh Forum. Fred Willis and Toz each scored twice in a 7-2 Eagle decision.

At Watson Rink on Dec. 17, Harvard bowed 6-5 in a thrilling overtime contest. Paul Schilling scored the tying goal in the last minute of play and added the winner by tipping in Paul Hurley's point shot in sudden death.

In the Boston Garden Christmas Tournament the Maroon and Gold tasted their first defeat.
